Overview

The Transition Center of St. Louis provides housing and transitional programming to men released from the Division of Adult Institutions or under community supervision in need of additional services. Two wings of the Transition Center are devoted to education, programming and group activities. Computer labs are also available for programming, education and job search. The Transition Center partners with several community providers to bring their services into the facility. Participation in available programming will help residents be able to balance the requirements of supervision with the responsibilities of living in the community.

Opportunities available

- Employment readiness
- Education
- Life skills
- Family reunification
- Parenting class
- Treatment
- Money management

Four-phase program

Phase I: Intake

- Residents will be given a tour of the facility, go through orientation, and will be placed in facility work assignments.
- Residents will be assigned a probation and parole officer and case manager, who will begin putting together assessments and a treatment plan

Phase II: Programming

- Begin programming, that has been tailored to residents based on the assessments and treatment plans
- Weekly case staffing & progress reports will update residents on their progress

Phase III: Pre-Release Planning

- Residents enter the third phase with programming in family reunification, interview skills, job search, money management and home economics.

Phase IV: Discharge Planning

- In the fourth phase, residents continue program work and identify mentor(s).
- Overnight and weekend passes may be issued as residents get closer to finalizing their discharge plan.
