Programming for Residents

Community Supervision Center:

As part of our effort to help Missourians succeed on probation or parole, our Community supervision centers (CSCs) have transitioned to the CSC Repurpose Model.

The four-phase model targets high-risk clients who need intensive programming in several areas and who are at risk of revocation. It focuses on incentives and sanctions as clients complete each of the four phases, with the referring Probation and Parole officer supervising the client while he or she is a CSC resident.

Programs are targeted to each client's assessed needs. Clients must complete core programming components before they can receive passes into the community for employment or other purposes.

Clients who have a risk score of moderate, high, or very high may be considered for placement at the CSC. The CSC provides residents with structure to aid and assist them in meeting their goals.

The data collected are used to establish a collaborative case plan and identify which reentry services and programs best meet each person's individual needs. Certified users can create assessments and case plans based on identified criminogenic domains. The automated case plan may be customized to capture the objectives, action steps, incentives and sanctions applied during varying points of a client's time with the department, both in facilities and in the community.

The Missouri Department of Corrections uses the Ohio Risk Assessment System (ORAS) to identify dynamic factors that drive a person toward negative or criminal behaviors.

Adopted department-wide June 1, 2019, the ORAS helps staff assess offenders, target interventions and inform responses to behavior. It helps us tailor the work we do to improving each Missourian's life.

The validated risk and needs assessment identifies each person's risk of re-offending. Information garnered helps to ensure each person gets the right interventions and programming. This system is employed throughout a Missourian's time with the department, on community supervision and during incarceration.
